Richards—

Rapier is the middle name of Paul Richards. The dictionary defines rapier like this: "A sword, with highly developed hilt, and long, slender, pointed blade used only for thrusting." No one will deny that last year in his debut as manager of the White Sox, Richards played the game to the hilt and his unexpected thrusts, particularly in the first half of the season, had the other seven teams in the American League backing up.

No doubt about it, Richards has rapier-like qualities, even as to his slender physique. No freshman manager within memory caused such a furor in the big leagues. The Sox had finished sixth the previous season. But they gradually gathered up steam, took the lead on the last day of May and held it until after the All-Star game interlude in July. The White Sox and their daring style of play, their unorthodox strategy, were the talk of all baseball.

But Richards is no wild-eyed, gesticulating manager. He is a quiet, tight-lipped general in the dugout, using the imagination and audacity of a MacArthur, jabbing here, jabbing there, and keeping the other team off balance. For 34 days the Sox led the American League parade. Their slump after that was due in no small measure to the energy they had spent in the first half of the race when they had to play up to the final out for almost every victory. Likewise they were in most of the games they lost. Twenty-six were won by a single run. Twenty-six were lost by the same margin.

Richards' appointment at 42 as a major league pilot climaxed a career which began in Waxahachie, Texas, a little town south of Dallas, long the butt of vaudeville jokes, like Hoboken or Walla Walla. From 1926, when he was 17, until 1949, when he was 40, Paul played from the bushes to the majors, down again, then back to the big time when in the 1945 world series, he helped the Detroit Tigers beat the Cubs for the world championship.

Richards brought a business-like consciousness of baseball to the White Sox. From the start, in Spring training, he stressed fundamentals, divided the squad into groups under supervision of himself and his four coaches. As a result the Sox were superbly conditioned when the race started. A tip-off on what was to come was the 18-6 record in exhibition games, best of all major league teams.

He's perhaps the nearest approach in baseball to the football coach who has a blueprint of every game to be played. To Paul, no two games are alike. What would be good strategy in one would be stupidity in another. No rival club ever will fathom Richards' thinking pattern because it is constantly changing. He makes his decisions with sharpness. He wasn't named Rapier for nothing.

Richards first demonstrated his managerial skill in 1938 when he was made manager of the Atlanta Crackers in the Southern Association. His team won the pennant. In five years at Atlanta his teams finished first twice, second once, fourth once, and fifth once. His Buffalo Bisons in 1947, 1948, and 1949 were fourth, sixth and first. In 1950, with a weak Seattle team, he finished sixth. In 10 years of managing, his clubs have been in the first division seven times.

In his twentieth year as a player, Richards, in 1945, was named on the Sporting News All-Star major league team. In his long career he played under six big league skippers, Wilbert Robinson, Max Carey, Dan Howley, Bill Terry, Connie Mack, and Steve O'Neill.

Paul's most spectacular move of 1951 came in Boston when the Red Sox, in Fenway Park, were celebrating their Golden Anniversary on May 15. The White Sox when into the last half of the ninth with a 7 to 6 lead and Harry Dorish pitching. First up for the Red Sox was Ted Williams, the southpaw slugger. Red Sox players almost fell off the bench in surprise when Dorish moved to third base and Lefty Billy Pierce came in to pitch to Williams. Ted popped out. Pierce left the game. Dorish moved back to the mound after the maneuver to eliminate Williams. Dorish and the Sox won in extra innings, 9 to 7, after Boston had tied it in the ninth. Not even baseball's oldest settlers could remember when a similar stunt had been pulled in the big leagues, though Richards later confessed he used the same stratagem—successfully, too—at Buffalo in 1949.

Richards was picked by General Manager Frank Lane as Sox skipper and it was no stab in the dark. Here's how Lane tells the story:

"When Larry MacPhail took over the Cincinnati Reds and hired me to operate the farm system I became personally acquainted with Richards. He was managing Atlanta and we owned Birmingham. I didn't like him much. He was, I thought, trying to manage, catch, and umpire. One night I told him off something like this: 'You so-and-so, I'm going to buy you an indicator.' He was the type of a fellow who made you mad as an opponent but you wished you had nine like him playing for you.

"Considering him my discovery, I followed Paul closely thereafter and finally made up my mind after he had gone to Detroit as a coach in 1945 and wound up catching at the age of 36, that if I ever had to hire a manager, Richards was my man. I guess the things which impressed me most were his insistence on speed and aggressiveness."

Richards was married on February 14, 1932, to Margie McDonald. They have a daughter, Paula, 13. He is of Irish-Scotch-English ancestry.

They are top men in the clubhouse

Myron (Mush) Esler, Trainer, was born in Kaukauna, Wis., in 1910, attended Seton Hall College in South Orange, N. J., where he played football, basketball and baseball. Mush started his career as trainer with the Milwaukee Brewers in 1938. In the Navy for almost five years he trained baseball and football teams at Great Lakes, Norfolk, and Fleet City. He was trainer for the Los Angeles Angels in 1946 and that fall joined the Chicago Cardinals football team as trainer, remaining in that post until he took over in 1951 as Sox trainer. He is married to the former Marian Frances, professional singer. They have a two-year-old son.

Ephriam (Sharkey) Colledge, equipment manager, was born in 1894 at 29th and Quinn, in the shadow of what now is Comiskey Park. At the age of 11, Sharkey joined the White Sox organization in the concession stands. In 1922 he became equipment manager. An explosion of the clubhouse boiler severely injured Sharkey late in the 1943 season and kept him inactive in 1944. He is married to the former Sigrid Andersen.

They help Richards call the shots

Jimmy Adair and Paul Richards have been friends since their boyhood days in Waxahachie, Texas. Adair's playing career started in 1927 when he was 22 in Mexia, Texas, in the old Lone Star League. In 18 seasons the Texan played from coast to coast. He played all infield positions except first base. In 1931 he was with the Chicago Cubs. He ended his active days in 1944 with San Francisco. Jim managed Longview in the East Texas League in 1940, Helena, Arkansas, in the Cotton States League the next year, Springfield in the Three-III League in 1942, Elmira in the Eastern League in 1945, and San Antonio in the Texas League in 1946. He came to the Sox in 1951 when Richards took over the Sox. Adair was born January 25, 1907, at Waxahachie. He's 5:10 and weighs 165 pounds. Among Jim's duties is coaching at third base. He is married and has two sons, 9 and 7.

The playing career of Ray Berres stretched from 1929 through 1946 and included 10 seasons in the National League as catcher with Brooklyn, Pittsburgh, Boston, and New York. Ray's only experience as manager was in 1946 with Richmond in the Piedmont League. In 1947, Ray was bullpen catcher for the Braves. The next year he was coach of the Milwaukee Brewers. This is his fourth season on the White Sox staff and it was a tribute to his ability that Berres was retained by Richards. Ray, a native of Kenosha, Wisconsin, broke into baseball with Waterloo, Iowa, in 1929. He was born August 31, 1908. Ray is 5:09 and weighs 170 pounds. He is married and has one son.

Roger (Doc) Cramer was one of the most durable players in modern day baseball and he left behind a brilliant American League record. Twenty of his 23 seasons were spent in the majors, the first seven with the Philadelphia Athletics, the next five with the Boston Red Sox, one with Washington, and the final seven with Detroit. Cramer concluded his playing days with Manager Paul Richards at Seattle in 1950—making two appearances as a pinch batsman while a coach on the club. He came to the Sox with Richards last season. In 1932 and in 1935 he made hits in six consecutive times at bat to tie a major league record earlier set by Jim Bottomley. Doc holds the major league record for most years (seven) leading the league in at-bats. He was outfielder on Sporting News All-Star Major League team in 1935. He played on the American League All-Star squads of 1935, 1938, and 1939. He coached Detroit in 1948 and Buffalo, under Richards, in 1950, when he also played in 65 games. Cramer was born July 22, 1906, at Beach Haven, New Jersey. He is 6:02 and his playing weight was 185 pounds. Cramer coaches at first base. He is married and has two daughters, 22 and 17.

Luman (Lum) Harris, 37, arrived in the big leagues in 1941 and pitched for the Philadelphia Athletics through 1946, except for 1945, when he was in military service. In 1947 Lum was with Washington. Later, he hurled for Louisville, Minneapolis, Jersey City, and Buffalo. At Buffalo in 1948 and 1949 his manager was Paul Richards. Lum ended his active career in 1950 at Buffalo, joining Richards with the White Sox last year. He's 6 feet 1 inch tall and his playing weight was 180 pounds. Born in Jefferson County, Alabama, he now makes his home in Birmingham. Married, he has two sons and one daughter.

Luis Aloma pitcher

Perhaps the most underrated member of the pitching corps is handsome Luis Aloma, one of the first young men discovered by Joe Cambria, pioneer seeker of Latins for the Washington Senators. He found Luis in time for the 1944 season, but the dapper Cuban escaped the Senators when Buffalo bought him in 1949, where he came under the tutelage of Paul Richards. Since Luis came to the Sox, a fortunate circumstance, he's been as close to perfect as a pitcher could be. He won 7 and lost only 2 in 1950. Last year he was even better with a 6-0 record, mostly in relief. That means he was a frequent passenger in the Sox station wagon from the centerfield bull pen. Luis had the amazing earned run average of 1.83, but was not in enough innings to qualify for the individual championship. Havana is the home base for Luis and his attractive wife.

Born June 19, 1923, at Havana, Bivora, Cuba. Throws right, bats right. Height, 6:01½. Weight, 190 pounds.

Hector Harold Brown pitcher

Here's a new pitching hope, this lanky right hander who was with the Sox in spring training last year, then was optioned to Rogers Hornsby's Seattle Rainiers, with whom he won 16 and lost 6 in helping that club win the Pacific Coast League crown. Then he won three more as Seattle took the league's Governor's Cup playoffs. Hec started his pro career in 1946 by winning 15 in a row for Durham, N. C., in the Piedmont League. Says Hornsby: "Brown likes to win. I like him because he gives you everything he's got on every pitch." Says the modest Brown: "I just keep throwing the ball up there, trusting to luck and a fast outfield." He's had only one losing season and pitched for Seattle in 1950 when Paul Richards was the manager. Hector, known as Skinny, was in the air force before joining Durham. He's married, has one child, and lives in Greensboro, N. C. He attended the University of North Carolina.

Born Dec. 11, 1924, at Greensboro, N. C. Throws right, bats right. Height, 6:02. Weight, 182 pounds.

Joseph Gordon Dobson pitcher

Six straight winning seasons is the record of Joe Dobson, the daddy of the Sox pitchers. The big right hander from Oklahoma's southern prairies around Durant, near the Texas border, won 7 and lost 6 in his first campaign with the White Sox. In eight seasons with the Red Sox, big Joe won 106 and lost 72. In two Cleveland years—back in 1939 and 1940—his total was 5-10. This will be Dobson's 14th year in professional baseball. He started in 1937 with Troy in the Alabama-Florida League. Joe has a son, Joe, Jr., and the family lives in Needham, Mass.

Born Jan. 20, 1917, at Durant, Okla. Throws right, bats right. Height, 6:02. Weight, 190 pounds.

Harry (Fritz) Dorish pitcher

Perhaps the record books should list Harry Dorish as a pitcher-third baseman. Harry was pitching for the Sox, minding his own business, when the ninth inning arrived in a game with the Red Sox in Boston on May 15, last. Imagine his surprise when Manager Paul Richards told him to play third base and installed Billy Pierce on the mound. Ted Williams, first up, hit a pop fly. Richards' strategy had worked. So Pierce left the game and Dorish returned to the mound to face the right-handed batters. Dorish and the Sox won the game in extra innings. The Sox drafted the chunky right hander from Toronto for 1951 and it was a good investment. Harry was valuable in relief, posting a 5-6 record. He made his debut as an 18-year old in 1941 with Canton in the Mid-Atlantic League. His earned run mark last year of 3.53 was his best in the majors. Harry is married and lives in Kingston, Pa.

Born July 13, 1923, at Swoyerville, Pa. Throws right, bats right. Height, 5:11. Weight, 206 pounds.

Ross Grimsley pitcher

A strikeout specialist is 29-year-old Ross Grimsley, rookie southpaw who is getting his first real big league opportunity this year. The 6-foot Kansan fanned 295 batsmen in his first professional season, with Chanute in the Kansas-Oklahoma-Missouri League, in 1946. He whiffed 262 the following season at Topeka in the Western Association. In fact, he's averaged close to a strikeout an inning in six seasons. He was purchased late last year from Montreal after winning 4 and losing 1, mainly in a relief role. He could strengthen the Sox bull pen when a lefty is needed. Grimsley is married and lives in Americus, Kas.

Marvin Edward Grissom pitcher

This large right hander from California is getting his third major league chance after trials with the New York Giants and Detroit Tigers. Grissom, a brother of Lee Grissom, one time National League southpaw, combined with Hector Brown to bring a Pacific Coast League title to Seattle. Marv led the league in victories, with 20, losing 11. Grissom had one professional season at San Bernardino, before serving four years during the war. Until last year, his best campaign was in 1948 when he won 11 and lost 7 for Sacramento. Marvin is married and lives in Red Bluff, Calif.

Kenneth Edward Holcombe pitcher

Ken Holcombe is among the few pitchers who have triumphed over a sore arm. The Yankees thought he was through after bursitis caught up with Ken following a fine 1945 season when he had an earned run record of 1.80 with the New Yorkers in 55 innings. There followed discouraging experiences with several clubs until Ken won 19 against 10 setbacks in 1949 for Sacramento. This brought him another big league chance with the Sox. He had a disappointing 3-10 record in 1950, but last year was impressive at 11-12 and with a 3.79 earned run tabulation. Ken lives in Asheville, N. C., and is married.

Howard Kolls Judson pitcher

Here's another Sox pitcher with great potential. The former University of Illinois ace needed only a season and a half before coming up to the White Sox for good at the start of the 1948 season. He showed encouraging signs last year when he won 5 and lost 6 and posted his lowest big league earned runs average, 3.76. In three of his four Sox campaigns, Judson has been under .500 by only one game. Howie still lives in the town of his birth, Hebron, Ill. He is unmarried.

William Aulton Kennedy pitcher

Midway in the 1952 spring training season the White Sox bought Bill Kennedy, southpaw pitcher, from the St. Louis Browns. He broke into professional baseball in 1939, but created no furor until 1946 when he fanned 456 batsmen in 280 innings for Rocky Mount in the Coastal Plain League, winning 28 games and losing only 3. After winning 15 times for Scranton in 1947, Kennedy was drafted by Cleveland, which traded him to the Browns. He is married and the father of three children. His home is in Rocky Mount, N. C.

Louis Henry Kretlow pitcher

He couldn't win for the Detroit Tigers or St. Louis Browns, but Lou Kretlow, the lank Oklahoman, may be the surprise of the Sox pitching staff. Manager Paul Richards believes he has the potential to win 15 or more games. Last year Lou had his most productive of four big league seasons, winning 6 and losing 9, with a creditable 4.20 earned run mark. The Tigers paid Lou $35,000 for his signature after he starred in a service tournament in 1946. He's a strong-armed right hander. Lou lives in Edmond, Okla., is an insurance broker, is married and the father of two girls.

Floyd Penfold pitcher

Eleven other major league clubs sought Floyd Penfold, but the White Sox won his signature with a bonus contract for three years. Last year, in his first professional season, Floyd won 11 and lost 12 for the Sox Three-III League farm club in Waterloo, Ia. "I chose the Sox because they're building and figure to be on top in two or three years," said Penfold. Now 19, Floyd was a star prep school hurler at South Gate, a suburb of Los Angeles. The rangy pitcher's right arm is long and supple. The blond hair and blue eyes are from his mother, who is of Nordic descent. His boyhood hero was Lou Gehrig. He is married.

Walter William Pierce pitcher

One of the prize lefties of the major leagues is Billy Pierce, the clean-cut young man from Detroit who was the first link in the spectacular building job started by General Manager Frank Lane at the close of the 1948 season. Lane hit the jackpot on that one, giving up Catcher Aaron Robinson for Billy the Kid and $10,000 in Detroit Tiger greenbacks.

When Billy has his "stuff," as the people in baseball say, there is no better pitcher in the game. Manager Paul Richards was Pierce's boss in 1947 at Buffalo when the southpaw won 14 and lost 8. In 1948, Pierce, used with care, won 3 and lost none for the Tigers. He still is under .500 for the Sox—34 victories and 45 defeats in three campaigns—but his 15-14 record last year leads to the hope he will crash the 20-game winning circle this year.

Experts on pitching form say Pierce's success is founded on the high arc his left arm describes in the delivery, which is almost effortless. Last year his control improved to the extent that he walked fewer than three for each nine innings. He whipped Cleveland five times in six decisions. On July 3 he hurled a three-hitter to snap the Indians' seven-game victory streak. On August 7 he went all the way to beat his old Tiger teammates—in 13 innings. He held the Indians to one hit in a 7-1 triumph on August 17. He whipped the Yankees 7 to 1 on September 18, slowing up the progress of the champs-to-be. A week later Billy picked on the Indians again, downing them 4 to 2. Pierce's 240 innings were high for American League southpaws.

Billy was voted the standout player in a boys' national all-star game in 1944, but passed up a college scholarship for baseball. He was only 18 when he made his debut in 1945 with Buffalo. He's been with only three clubs—Buffalo, Detroit, and Chicago. Billy is married and lives in Highland Park, Michigan.

Saul Rogovin pitcher

Here's the potential ace of the pitching staff. Big Saul, the sad-faced right hander from Brooklyn (no, he never played with dem Bums), was the major leagues' earned runs champion in 1951, holding the opposition to an average of 2.78 runs each nine innings. He represented Manager Paul Richards' biggest gamble of the year. On May 15, Richards traded Lefty Bob Cain to the Detroit Tigers for Saul, who in two seasons, hampered by a sore arm, had never been a regular. Paul remembered Rogovin had won 16 games for him at Buffalo in 1949, plus three games in the Shaughnessy play-offs.

Thirteen days after he joined the Sox—this was on May 28—Saul started paying off when he whipped the St. Louis Browns—the 12th straight triumph in the club's 14-game victory string—and the one which put the Sox in the American League lead. Saul was such a steady workman that he finished 17 of his 26 starts.

On June 4 he hurled his second consecutive two-hitter to blank the Red Sox, 2 to 0. Then came his bitter disappointment of the season. Comiskey Park was almost completely packed the night of July 12 when he faced the Red Sox in a night game after the Sox had lost the twilight number of a double header. On and on Saul pitched until he lost in the 17th inning, 5 to 4. In his next start he beat the Yankees in 10 innings, 4 to 3. Twice in August he blanked the Tigers, once on five hits, the other on seven.

Rogovin was working in a war plant when his baseball skill—on Sunday afternoons—was discovered by Dolly Stark, the umpire. Saul started out in 1945 with Chattanooga in the Southern Association as a third baseman, batting .280. On the last day of the season he asked for a chance to pitch and shut out Birmingham on four hits. From that day on he was a pitcher.

Rogovin eventually landed with Detroit in 1950 after three seasons at Buffalo. He had won only three big league matches when he came to Chicago. Saul's complete record last year was 1-1 for the Tigers and 11-7 for the Sox. A bachelor, he lives in Brooklyn.

Albert Joseph Widmar pitcher

The magic of Manager Paul Richards and his coaching staff in helping a pitcher "find himself" will be tested in the case of Al Widmar, giant right hander obtained from the St. Louis Browns. He was a tremendous 22-15 campaigner with Baltimore in 1949. With the lowly Browns Al's record in 1950 was 7-15 and last year 4-9. With a better club behind him, Widmar could be a pleasant surprise. He won those 22 games in '49 with a seventh-place club, then reported late in '50 to the Browns. In 1946, Widmar's 2.43 earned run average at Louisville was the best in the American Association. Widmar is married, has two children, and in the winter is freshman basketball coach at Scranton University.

Charles Klein Stobbs pitcher

The 22-year old southpaw, counted on to bolster the southpaw division of the pitching corps, was a bonus baby grabbed by the Boston Red Sox in 1947 after a phenomenal prep record at Norfolk, Va. Chuck served only one year in the minors, then went to the Red Sox in 1948. Chicago obtained him last winter. In three years Stobbs won 33 and lost only 22 for the Red Sox. A native of Wheeling, W. Va., he now lives in Norfolk, Va., and is single.

John Sherman Lollar catcher

This compactly built 27-year-old is counted on to bolster the catching staff. Lollar and Phil Masi give the Sox two experienced receivers. And besides that, Lollar is a long ball hitter. In nine professional seasons, Sherm has blasted 116 homers. His high in the majors was 13 for the St. Louis Browns in 1950 when he was that club's leading hitter and was selected on the American League All-Star squad. In two games for the Yankees in the 1947 world series against Brooklyn, Lollar batted .750. A native of Arkansas, Lollar attended Pittsburg (Kansas) State Teachers College. Married, he lives in St. Louis and is a salesman.

Born Aug. 23, 1924, at Durham, Ark. Bats right, throws right. Height, 6:00. Weight, 180 pounds.

Philip Samuel Masi catcher

This will be Phil's 17th professional season, which for diamond longevity, puts him at the head of Sox players. In his 11th season with the Braves he was transferred to Pittsburgh. The following year, 1950, Phil finally made good in his home town when his contract was purchased from the Pirates. He is married, has a step-daughter, and lives in Berwyn.

Born Jan. 6, 1917, at Chicago, Ill. Bats right, throws right. Height, 5:10. Weight, 185 pounds.

Hollis (Bud) Sheely catcher

Son of Earl Sheely, the old time White Sox first baseman, Bud came up to the club last year and appeared in 34 games after starting the campaign with Seattle in the Pacific Coast League. Bud has been in baseball since 1941, except for war service. His best season was in 1949 when he slashed the ball for a .348 average, driving in 117 runs and hitting 21 homers. Bud is married and has two children. His home is in Sacramento, Calif.

Robert James (Red) Wilson catcher

The one-time University of Wisconsin athlete could be the White Sox first string catcher of the future. Like Jim Busby, Wilson chose baseball over professional football. He was Wisconsin's and the Big Ten's most valuable player in 1949. After two years' preparation he has a chance to make the big leagues. Bob batted .319 at Waterloo in 1950. Last year he hit .327 at Memphis and .273 in late season matches with the White Sox. The burly catcher and his wife make their home in Madison.

Born March 7, 1929, at Milwaukee. Bats right, throws right. Height, 6:00. Weight, 200 pounds.

Robert Richard Boyd infielder

A sharp hitter, Bob Boyd batted .342 in 145 games for Sacramento last season. In spring training his Herculean job was to displace Eddie Robinson at first base for the White Sox. Bob had four seasons in top Negro leagues before the Sox signed him in 1950 and assigned his contract to Colorado Springs in the Western League, where he batted .373 in 42 games. In Negro baseball, he never hit under .352. A left hander all the way, he's a slick fielder. Boyd attended high school one year at New Albany, Miss., then went to work to help support the family when his mother died. He is married, has one son, and is a veteran of World War II.

* Negro Southern League † Negro American League

Alfonso (Chico) Carrasquel infielder

The flossiest of adjectives are inadequate to describe the play of Chico Carrasquel at shortstop. The Caracas Cat—that's Chico's home town down in Venezuela—last year smashed the American League all-time record for shortstops when he accepted 297 chances without an error. Day after day, night after night, Chico grabbed everything in sight from May 27 until July 28. He was named on the American League All-Star team over Phil Rizzuto, the Yankees' great short fielder.

His spectacular work saved dozens of base hits, making the Sox pitchers that much more effective. Thus, he made a major contribution in the sensational play of the club.

Chico was astounded when the nation's baseball fans elected him over Rizzuto for the All-Star team. He was a villain to most of the batsmen whom he robbed of hits day after day. But he even played a darker role against the Athletics' southpaw, Sam Zoldak, on July 15. In the third inning, Chico knocked a single. That was the only hit the Sox got off Sam. Carrasquel was fourth in the league in stolen bases, with 15.

Carrasquel, one of 10 children in his family, started playing "beisbol" at 15. His father, Columbus Carrasquel, worked for a beer company in Caracas. While manager at Buffalo, Paul Richards heard tales of the Venezuelan youngster with the magnetic hands. But the club owners vetoed the deal and Chico was signed by one of Branch Rickey's Brooklyn agents. In 1949, his first year in organized baseball, Chico hit .315 for Fort Worth in the Texas League and word of his fielding wizardry spread.

Frank Lane, the Sox general manager, maneuvered Rickey into a spot where he convinced the shrewd old trader he had agreed to sell Chico for $35,000 and two ball players. In his major league debut with the Sox in 1950, Chico measured up to all his advance raves—and those Texas sports writers are an ecstatic lot.

Chico speaks little English and his interpreter is Luis Aloma, the standout relief pitcher. The lithe shortstop is married, has three children, and on January 23 celebrated his 24th birthday.

Born Jan. 23, 1928, at Caracas, Venezuela. Bats right, throws right. Height, 5:09. Weight, 172 pounds.

Sam Joseph Dente infielder

The 30-year-old from New Jersey is counted on to give the Sox added infield strength. Sam has been a capable workman for five years in the American League with the Browns, Red Sox, and Senators. He broke into baseball in 1941 with Owensboro in the Kitty League and had two years in military service. He came to the Sox in exchange for Infielder Tom Upton. Dente is married and his home is in North Arlington, N. J.

Born April 26, 1922, at Harrison, N. J. Bats right, throws right. Height, 5:11. Weight, 175 pounds.

Robert Benard Dillinger infielder

Bob Dillinger will be starting his first full season in Comiskey Park. He added to the dash and verve of the Sox after joining the club on May 16 last year from Pittsburgh. Bob, one of modern baseball's greatest base runners, will be in his 11th professional season in a career interrupted by three years of military service. A somber-looking and droll fellow, the bespectacled Dillinger three times led the American League in base thievery. Last year he batted .301. He lives in San Fernando, Calif., with his wife and 8-year old daughter.

Born Sept. 17, 1918, at Glendale, Calif. Bats right, throws right. Height, 5:11½. Weight, 170 pounds.

Jacob Nelson (Nellie) Fox infielder

In 1951, a season of surprises for the Sox, the ascent to stardom of little Nellie Fox perhaps was most spectacular. Here was a 155-pounder, who never had risen above mediocrity, suddenly becoming the spark plug of the team which led the American League during most of the first half.

"His play was most astonishing to me," says Manager Paul Richards of the pepper-pot second baseman. "I was frankly worried about the position when the '51 season started. Nellie never had hit much. He was weak on completing the double play. But in spring practice we gave him special instruction on evading the runner coming into the bag to break up the play."

In the first portion of the campaign, Little Nell bashed the ball at a .364 clip. He meshed perfectly with Chico Carrasquel into a sparkling double-play combination. Perhaps his associates looked at Nellie, watching him perform miracles in the field and at the plate, and said to themselves: "If that guy can do the things he does, we can't let him down."

A fiery competitor, with a big chew of tobacco bulging from his jaw, his cap set at a jaunty angle, Fox is reminiscent of Rabbit Maranville, the Boston Braves' old infielder. He's the best proof in baseball today that size is not paramount.

In three of his seasons with the Sox, Eddie Collins—like Fox a second baseman—fanned only 16 times. Fox broke that record last summer when he was a whiffing victim only 11 times. Like Carrasquel, Fox was voted on the league All-Star team by millions of fans in the annual poll.

On June 8 he led the league in batting with a fancy .368. On May 15 he had socked his first major league home run with two on to beat the Red Sox. On July 19 he drove in both runs in a 2 to 1 decision over the Yankees. Nellie ranked third in the league in hits, seventh in scoring, and tied for second in triples, with 12.

Nellie's father literally delivered him to baseball. As a 16-year-old, the lad was driven in 1944 to the Athletics' spring camp at Frederick, Md., from the family home in nearby St. Thomas. Nellie hit .325 that year for Lancaster in the Interstate League. There was time out in 1946 for military service and Nellie bounced back the next summer with Lancaster, hitting .281. The A's called him up that fall and in 1948 shipped him to Lincoln, Nebraska, where he hit .311. On October 19, 1949, the Sox traded Catcher Joe Tipton to Philadelphia for the little fellow with the bulging cheek whose full name is Jacob Nelson Fox. He's married, has one daughter, and makes his home in St. Thomas.

Melvin Hoderlein infielder

He came to the White Sox in last November's deal with Boston, along with Pitcher Chuck Stobbs for Outfielder Don Lenhardt and Pitcher Randy Gumpert. Mel played six positions with the Louisville Colonels—one at a time, of course—and once smacked four triples in one game. That was in 1950 when he was named utility player on the American Association's All-Star squad. He hit .312 for Louisville last season and followed up with .357 in 9 games at Boston. Served three years in the army air force as flight engineer and instructor. Married and the father of a 5-year-old son, his home is in Trenton, N. J.

Peter Robert Krsnich infielder

The rangy Wisconsinite played 152 games for Seattle, Pacific Coast League champions, last year, batting .254. The 24-year-old has made a rapid advance since he batted .318 for Memphis in 1949. He hit .272 the following year for the same club. Krsnich makes his home in Seattle, is married, and has two children.

Hector Rodriguez infielder

Top rookie in the International League last year, his first in professional baseball, 31-year-old Hector Rodriguez is a candidate for third base. He led the league in stolen bases and gives the Sox another speed boy to go along with Minoso, Busby, and others. Hector was signed by Montreal as a free agent on the recommendation of Dr. Julio Sanguily, one of the owners of the Alamandares club in the Cuban League and his contract was purchased by the Sox. He helped Montreal win the pennant by 10½ games and was named on the league's all-star team at third base over Don Richmond of Rochester, the I. L. bat king during the last two years. Agile and sturdy at 170 pounds, Hector takes a hop, skip, and jump before firing the ball to first base. His home is in Havana, Cuba. He's married and has two children.

William Edward Robinson infielder

Eddie Robinson batted himself into the White Sox's own Hall of Fame last year by knocking 29 home runs, tying the all-time club record set by Gus Zernial in 1950. This rugged 205-pounder who has a granite chin and other facial characteristics of Jumbo Joe Stydahar, coach of the Los Angeles Rams, professional football champions, is the team's holler guy. He leads the players in college-like yells after they stomp into the clubhouse. That is, when they win. Eddie was awfully busy at this delightful chore the first half of the 1951 campaign. Robinson is his teammates' representative on the players' council which consults with the owners from time to time.

Robbie's 117 runs batted in was tops for the White Sox and the highest production of his five full major league seasons. Eddie had hit only one homer when he was traded by the Washington Senators to the Sox on Memorial Day, 1950. After that he drove out 20. He was a member of the American League All-Star squads of 1949 and 1951.

One of his big moments last summer came when he knocked a three-run homer on May 20 to beat the Senators. On June 15 he was setting the pace in the league for runs batted in and was tied for first in homers.

Just before he was swapped to the Sox in '50, Eddie tied a league record by making two unassisted double plays at first base. In 1948, with the Cleveland Indians, Robinson tied a major league mark by participating in six double plays in one contest. That year, in the world series against the Boston Braves, Eddie batted .300. At the end of that season he was traded to Washington, along with Pitchers Joe Haynes and Ed Klieman, for Pitcher Early Wynn and First Baseman Mickey Vernon. The Sox obtained Robinson, Pitcher Ray Scarborough, and Second Baseman Al Kozar from the Senators for Pitcher Bob Kuzava, Second Baseman Cass Michaels, and Outfielder John Ostrowski.

Robinson, born in Paris, Texas, attended junior college in that city, but now lives in Towson, Maryland, a suburb of Baltimore. He is married and has one child.

R. T. (Dixie) Upright infielder-outfielder

He's one of those rare people who have no first name. On the Sox contract it's "R. T. Upright" and the North Carolinian insists that's the way it has always been. Dixie made several stops along the way—in such towns as Keokuk, Iowa, Bartlesville, Okla., Fargo, N. D., and Waco, Tex. In the last three seasons he's been above .300. He slapped the ball in 1949 for .347 at Waco in the Big State League. In 1950 he hit .302 for New Orleans and made it .303 for Memphis in 1951, driving in 113 runs while hitting 20 home runs. He plays both first base and the outfield. Dixie is a war veteran and unmarried. His home is in Kannapolis, N. C.

Franklin James Busby outfielder

It was a hard decision for Jim Busby, but he chose baseball over professional football. He has never regretted it, because he needed only a three-year minor league apprenticeship to reach the big time. He was a fleet halfback at Texas Christian University and a teammate of Ransom Jackson, Chicago Cub third baseman. Frank Bridges, veteran scout of the Sox who tipped the club off to Ted Lyons in the long-ago, put the finger on Busby, whose spectacular fielding in center last summer caused observers to rate him the best Sox centerfielder since Mike Kreevich. It was Busby's speed on the bases which inspired the famous chant of the Comiskey Park fans, "Go! Go!" Jim stole 26 bases, ranking next in the league to Minnie Minoso. Busby makes his home in Corpus Christi, Texas, and is single.

Raymond Leroy Coleman outfielder

Ray Coleman started playing baseball with Paragould, Ark., in 1940. Because of the necessary apprenticeship and three years in the Navy, it was 1947 before the smiling youngster hit the big time. In 1947 he batted .259 for the St. Louis Browns and during 1948 was swapped to the Philadelphia Athletics. After Ray spent the 1949 season with Buffalo, the Browns traded Bob Dillinger to the A's for him. Coleman batted .271 for the Browns in 1950. The Sox obtained him in mid-season of '51, and the lanky outfielder ended the season with his best major league mark, .280. He has the ability and the desire to become outstanding. Ray is married, the father of two daughters, and lives in Mayfield, Ky.

The 25-year-old Arkansas athlete has made steady progress since entering baseball in 1948 with Hot Springs, the Sox farm in the Cotton States League, where he hit .283. The next summer he batted .297 at Waterloo, another Sox farm. In 1950 Ed knocked 169 hits for a .332 average at Memphis, still another Sox talent center. Last season Ed saw the country with stops at Indianapolis, Seattle, and Memphis, where he had a combined average of .307. McGhee, married and father of two sons, attends Arkansas State College in the winter, specializing in electricity.

Orestes (Minnie) Minoso outfielder

Perhaps never in the glamorous history of the White Sox has one of their players made as spectacular a debut as that of Orestes (Minnie) Minoso. It was on May 1, 1951, when the Cuban Comet reported to the club, still an untried rookie. The scene: Comiskey Park, Vic Raschi pitching for the New York Yankees. Let Minnie tell it in his own words:

"Raschi gave me a pretty good ball to hit and it went over the centerfield wall for a homer, 450 feet from home plate. It was a good start and gave me the jump I needed. I knew I could hit in the league and it calmed my nerves, letting me play my own game."

That was the first of hundreds of thrills Minnie gave Sox fans at the plate and on the baselines, where his speed and daring brought him the American League championship with 31 thefts. He also led the league in triples with 14.

At season's end, Minoso had a tidy .326 batting average, second to Ferris Fain of the Athletics; 112 runs, one behind the league leader; 173 hits, 10 homers, 14 triples, and 34 doubles. For 10 weeks he paced the league's hitters, despite the mental strain of alternating between third base and the outfield.

Two hundred and twenty-seven big league baseball writers voted Minoso the "Rookie of the Year" in a poll for the Sporting News. He was the league's right fielder in the All-Star game. It was a great year of triumph for the pleasant Cuban Negro who had quit school at 14 to work in the sugar fields to help keep the family going.

"There's the ball player I like most to see," said Bill Veeck, owner of the St. Louis Browns, who as Cleveland's leader had signed Minoso to a Cleveland contract in 1948. "No other player in the game gives you the thrill he does—taking that extra base on an ordinary single, stealing bases, and throwing out runners. I love to watch him play!"

It was Minoso and Jim Busby, his outfielding colleague, who supplied the dazzling speed on the base paths which threw rival teams into confusion the first half of the race. Sometimes his own coaches were startled by Minnie's daring. In Boston, Minoso was on third base when Al Zarilla lifted a short fly to Dom DiMaggio, the rifle-armed center fielder. Jim Adair, coaching at third, yelled, "No, no!" as Minnie broke for the plate. But Minoso, flying down the base path, cried back over his shoulder, "Too late, too late, I gone!" And after he had slid safely across the plate he looked at Adair and said, "Hokay?"

After playing sandlot ball in Cuba, Minnie moved up to the Marianao club in the Cuban League and thence to the New York Cubans. After signing him in 1948, the Cleveland Indians sent the young man to Dayton, Ohio, where he socked the ball for .525 in 11 Central League games. The Indians moved him to San Diego in 1949, where he hit .297. With the same club in 1950, Minnie batted .339 and was with the Indians early last season when the Sox landed him in a three-cornered deal with Philadelphia and Cleveland.

His full name is Saturnino Orestes Arrieta Armas Minoso and he was born in Perico Matanzas province, Cuba, November 29, 1923. He's 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighs 178 pounds, is bull-shouldered and heavy calfed. He's of Negro-Spanish descent. His father's name is Esteban Minoso. Gary Cooper is his movie hero and the Argentinian, Charles Gardel, his favorite singer. He likes to ride horseback. He's unassuming and friendly—except on the baseball field.

Born Nov. 29, 1923, at Matanza, Cuba. Bats right, throws right. Height, 5:11. Weight, 175 pounds.

Don Nicholas gets his major league chance after four years in the minors. An impressive .333 in 67 games with Mobile last season won him promotion to the White Sox. In 40 games, earlier in the year, Don batted .241 for St. Paul in the American Association. He is married and his home is in Phoenix, Ariz. Edward Perry Stewart outfielder

One of the best "spot" players for the Sox last season was rangy Ed Stewart, who three times beat the Yankees with home runs. Although he came to the plate only 217 times, Ed drove in 40 runs. It has been a checkered career for Stewart since he broke into organized baseball in 1937 with San Diego. After the 1942 season, he left baseball for two years. He had failed with the Pittsburgh Pirates. He resumed in 1945 with Hollywood and played with the Yankees and Washington before the Sox obtained him from the Senators for 1951. He's a graduate of U. C. L. A., is a physical education instructor in the off-season, and has appeared in bit parts in the movies. Ed's home is at Inglewood, Calif., near Los Angeles. He is married and has two children.

George Washington Wilson outfielder

Here is one of the most exciting of White Sox prospects, this 26-year-old who comes from Kings Mountain, N. C. He's a left-handed power hitter, who blasted out 29 homers last summer for Birmingham and hit .325. George, his middle name is Washington, started the baseball trail in 1942 with Owensboro in the Kitty League. He was signed to his first professional contract by the late Herb Pennock. He has been named to all-star teams in three minor leagues.

Born Aug. 30, 1926, at Cherryville, N. C. Bats left, throws right. Height, 6:02. Weight, 185 pounds.

Allen Lee Zarilla outfielder

One of the most determined of the White Sox this season is Al Zarilla, who hit a disappointing .257 last year. Twice before in his 9-year American League career, Zarilla has bounced back after disappointing performances. After batting .224 for the St. Louis Browns in 1947 he rallied with .329 the next season. He slumped to .277 for the Browns and Boston Red Sox in 1949, but came up with a robust .325 in 1950 for the Red Sox. Al is married and has one son. The family home is in Monrovia, Calif., near Los Angeles.

Born May 1, 1920, at Los Angeles, Calif. Bats left, throws right. Height, 5:11. Weight, 180 pounds.
